do. Sequence-specific interaction of the RNA recognition motif of human Ku80 with a conserved mRNA 3' end. Ku, an essential protein involved in trans-somal and trans-nuclear DNA repair, is a high molecular weight DNA- and RNA-binding protein that requires an RNA binding motif (RBM) in its amino-terminal domain for functional activity. Here, we report the identification of a novel RBM at the amino-terminal amino acid 198 of human Ku80. Mutating the conserved arginine in this RBM to alanine (RBMm) abolished both homo- and heterodimerization of Ku80 with Ku70 and Ku86. Mapping of the sequence requirement for specific binding of Ku80 to target RNA revealed a specific hybridization site at the 5' splice site of the pre-mRNA. Mutating this hybridization site abolished Ku80 homo-dimerization. Interestingly, this sequence is absent from the 3' splice site and its mutation did not affect heterodimerization. Hybridization of the nucleoprotein of Ku80 RBMm with a 4-base-long ssRNA was reduced significantly. Q: How to extract possible combinations of a list of letters f678ea9f9e
